Eye on innovation

patent reviews

2. Peer Review Process

Why is peer review so important for science?

Peer review is the cornerstone of academic publishing -- the rock upon which all scholarly knowledge, citations, re-use, and research integrity are based.

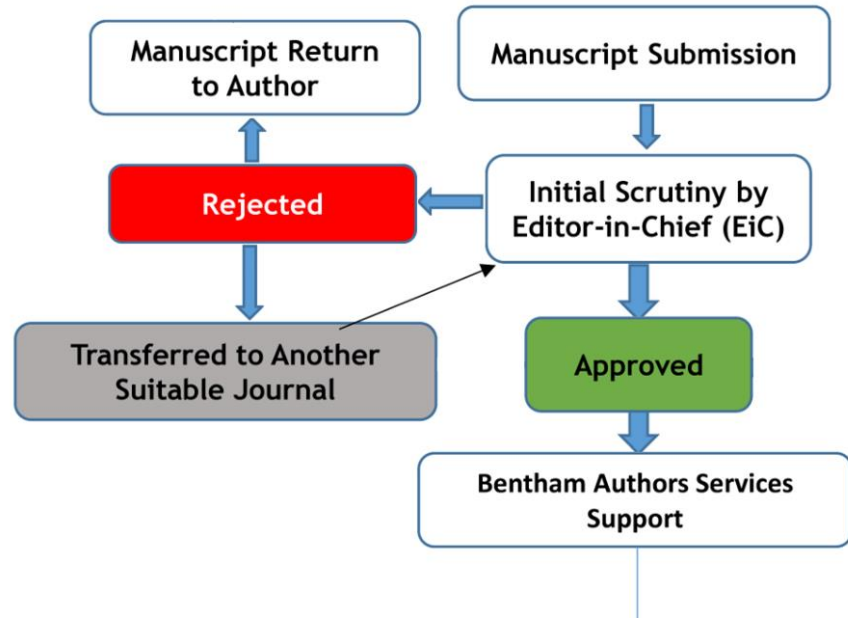

Scholars all over the world engage in peer review -- as academic journal editors, as authors submitting their work to international journals, or as peer reviewers themselves.

Bentham's uniquely robust peer review process

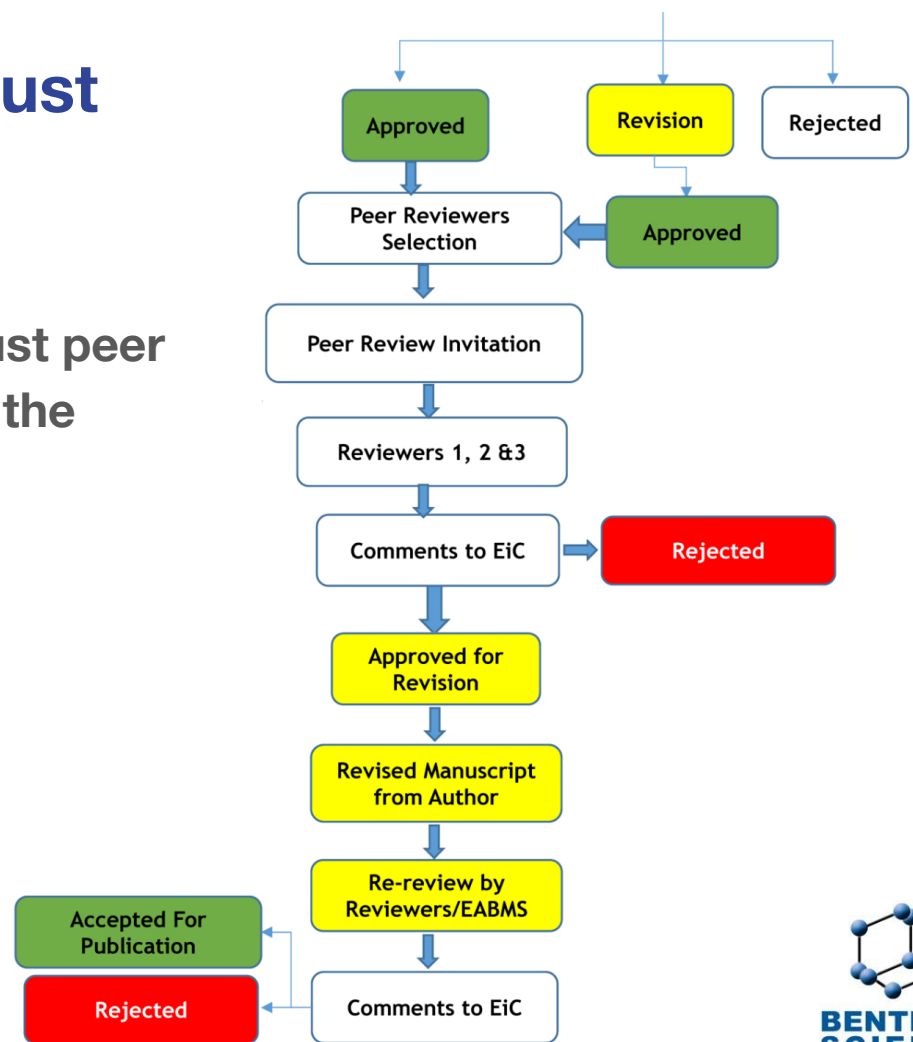

Bentham Science is an excellent choice for authors and readers, because our publication process is uniquely thorough.

This is how we are able to maintain such high quality standards across all of our publications.

Bentham's uniquely robust peer review process

We are proud to have the most robust peer review process of any publisher in the world.

Reviewers are carefully selected to match YOUR paper

Double-blind reviews are carried out by researchers who have been vetted based on their background, profile, and previous publications.

Bentham peer reviewers are ranked within our pool of more than 80,000 active researchers based on their previous performance, speed, and review utility.

No other publisher does this!

Bentham peer review is based on selection from a vetted and verified pool of experts.

By design, our editors are NOT involved in peer reviewer selection! This removes bias and dramatically reduces the risks of research misconduct in peer review.

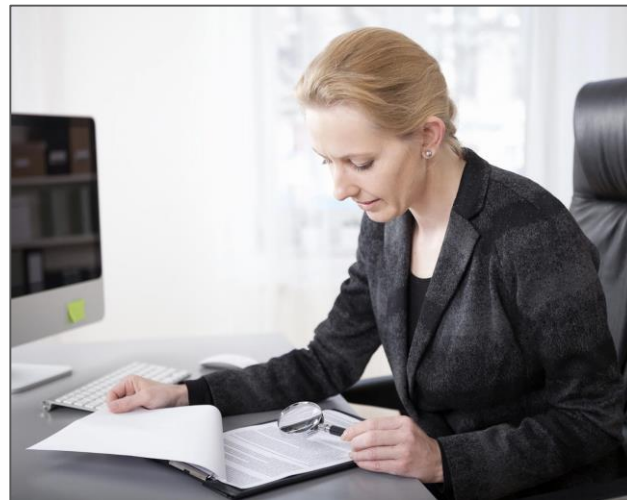

Editors-In-Chief expertly perform three quality checks

- 1 • First, on receipt of the manuscript the editor will determine whether it matches the aims and scope of the journal. Is the manuscript novel enough and interesting enough to be sent for peer review?
- 2 • Second, after receipt of peer review reports from between two and four independent referees, the editor will review the paper again.
- 3 • Third, after modification of the manuscript by the author(s) in light of the peer review reports, the editor makes a final decision.

Does it take longer to conduct such robust peer review?

Even with such high quality standards, we are usually able to complete peer review within 4-6 weeks. Compare this with less-efficient journals, where peer review may take many months.

We will keep you well informed of your paper's progress. Just check our convenient online Manuscript Processing System to find the status of your paper.

Journal selection and open access

The journal selection pirate code: Three rules

(1) Aim high!

- ✓ Make a list of 5-10 journals in your field where you would like to see your research published
- ✓ Rank them by Impact Factor

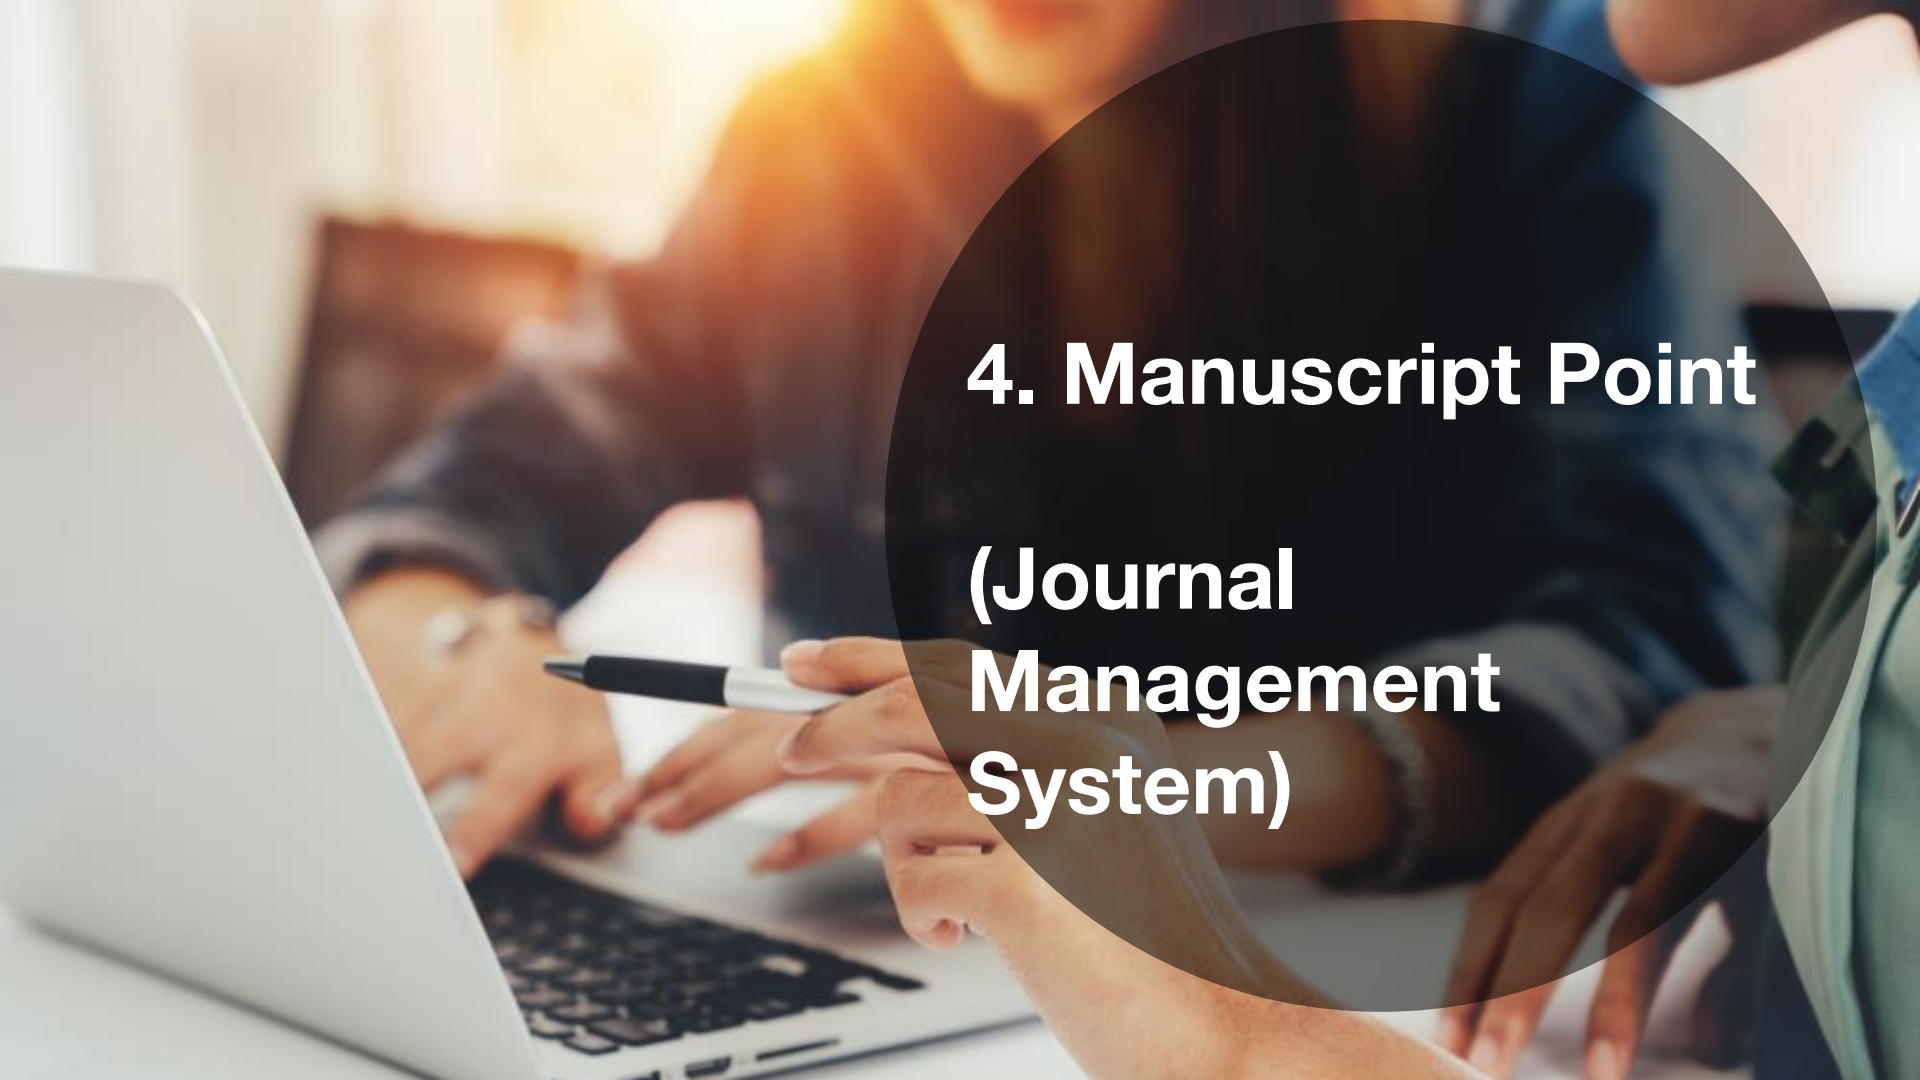

(2) Talk to editors!

- ✓ Write pre-submission enquires
- ✓ Get a potential journal lined up before you start to write

Don't panic!: These are more like guidelines, really

(3) Training: Learn to sell and manage your article submissions
